Feedback Comments

What should he/she stop doing?

Nothing

He should stop getting involved with the small detail of issues. This can become very derailing.

- Focusing on the detail. However set and drive high level strategies
- Dealing directly with departmental staff on issues without informing the Manager. The Manager is in a position to elicit accurately what the need is and decide on the best way and person to address it
- Not sure, but perhaps being too overly cautious about sharing certain events or commitments which could impact the manager/team/information/our positioning. Be candid; together we can make it a very successful/ impactful event/information piece/etc.

He should not be afraid or overly concerned what other people especially his peers would think of him if he takes a clear stand.

He should have more faith in himself and be able to take criticism as a lesson to learn and not a personal attack.

Feedback Comments

What should he/she start doing?

Communicating more, not be afraid of stepping on people's toes or taking chances.

Noel should rely more on the expertise /experience of his team. A clear vision and strategy should be set for HR that involves all the team members. He should foster a culture of learning from one another and allowing himself and the rest to make mistakes and constructively learn from them.

Focus on overall strategic HR strategy

Work through the department manager for information/assistance

Share information/events/presentations, so as to be in a better position to support where needed. Not sure if it's not important to share but believe it creates a more open work environment and an awareness of what's happening.

Do more to focus the HR Management team in line with a clear collective goal.

Work on the communication of business strategic information impacting on the various departments.

Do more short personal discussions with direct reports

Get to grips with some hindering factors/challenges by getting involved

Give more strategic direction

Noel, Sometimes we ( HR) lack direction and I need the rebel in you to not conform to the Company way and start establishing a different way for those that needs to take the business into the next decade.

Feedback Comments

What should he/she keep doing?

Noel, personally I feel that my company experience have improved 100 fold since you have arrived. You provided me with the space to be myself. Your calm under pressure and your (sometimes I think blind) faith in us is liberating. Thank you!!!

Being involved in what I do, expressing a genuine interest.

Help creating a platform for me to be effective

Keep engaging in a personal way at all levels Keep at open and frank discussions

Continue liaising with other executives to position the role of HR and the benefits of including HR management in future decision making.

- Retain good calming composure
- Sometimes unknowingly or by way of conversation address key touch points (ends up being good discussion) - Generally liked by people (chatty, happy, approachable)
- Good public image
- Realistic about what we should focus on
- Supportive

Noel should keep on allowing the team the space to make their own decisions. He has the ability to connect with people on all levels of the organisation and should keep on doing so. His unruffled demeanor in conflict situations should remain; it has a calming effect on the people around him.

Self development
